Carter at Midterm: Inflation and Arms Are the Top Issues

ted Bridge the WASHINGTON, Nov. 6 (NYT) — President Carter thinks he may have misjudged the powers of his office in his first two years in the White House — being overly cautious and even timid, he says — but he is still satisfied with the results and plans to concentrate for the next two years on controlling inflation at home and the nuclear arms race abroad.

Among the points touched on by Ayatollah Khomeini in the interview were:

• The United States, with its thousands of military advisers in Iran, will "take any measures to maintain this regime" of the shah, he said. Ayatollah Khomeini, who strongly opposes foreign influence in Iran, accused the new Iranian military government of being "un-

Seen for Shah In New Regime

By William Claiborne

TEHRAN, Nov. 6 (WP) — Iran's parliament was dissolved today as a military regime took control of the government and imposed severe measures to pu down a growing insurrection against Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi.

Installed as premier was Army Gen. Gholam Reza Azhari, chief of staff of the armed forces, who received his command training at the U.S. Army General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. He replaced Jaafar Sharif-Emami, who had succeeded Jamshid Amouzegar in August.

The shah, who will continue to reign as monarch but play an apparently curtailed role in governing Iran, promised to form a national unity government and hold free elections "after order is restored." If they are held, the elections could result in a constitu-tional monarchy, limiting the shah's power.

The shah said that he has appointed a "caretaker" government and had accepted the Cabinet's resignation "to avoid the collapse of the economy and to bring about peace." He said that the alternative was the "disintegration of the country."

Surprisingly, the shah seemed to concede that political excesses had occurred during his firm rule of Iran, and acknowledged that they could occur again.
"I am aware of the possibility that past mistakes and oppressions will be repeated, where some people

While the constitution of Iran requires that 90 days after the dissolution of a government new elections be held, the shah said that the elections will be held only after order has been restored. Until then, he said, "the maintenance of law and order is the main responsibility of the imperial armed forces."

The shah also made a conciliatory gesture toward Moslem leaders, calling upon "leaders of Islam and especially Shiites to try to help by inviting people to keep calm to preserve this, the only country which is

Government officials went to great lengths to dispel the notion that the army had staged a coup, and the appearance of several civilians in the Cabinet appeared to be an attempt to demonstrate that the shah had engineered the installation of the new government. But nine of the 12 ministerial portfolios were filled by generals.

Order Is Restored

The army swept through Tehran with tanks and soldiers and quickly restored order in areas where rampaging youths had created chaos with a wave of arson and looting during the last two days.

The streets were deserted today and, in the few instances where protesters attempted to demonstrate. (Continued on Page 2, Col. 8)

The sudden disappearance of Iranian oil from the world market has put heavy upward pressure on the price of all oil. During the weekend, traders were reporting premiums of about $1 a barrel on the spot market.

Before last week's disturbances, Iranian oil exports had been averaging nearly 5 million barrels a day, or roughly 10 percent of world oil production and about 15 per-cent of all the oil moved by sea in international trade.

The developments in Iran have come in the midst of a rush by oil companies to stockpile petrolet in anticipation of a January price

The upturn comes after a spring and summer of deepening tension and bitter rhetoric over Soviet activities in Africa and dissident trials in Moscow. Mr. Brezhnev's message was underscored by a related concern — China and the West's future policy toward it.

Valentin Falin, a senior staff official of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party, supplied some of the details in an interview at party headquarters. Kissinger Deal Alleged

On Angola, Mr. Falin maintained that former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger had forged a "mutual understanding" with Moscow that called for "a joint solution" of the problem of decolonization there. He said that this plan, involving a coalition government of three competing African factions, fell apart and the fighting occurred when the CIA began covertly supporting one of the factions shortly before the new government was ready.

(No U.S.-Soviet agreement on Angola was reported at the time, late 1974 and early 1975, when the transitional government of all parties was being established. Mr. Kissinger was out of Washington and unavailable for comment on the Soviet account. William Hyland, an associate of Mr. Kissinger and a former National Se-curity Council aide, said that he knew of no discussion with the Russians or understanding about Angola during that period.) On the Middle East, Mr. Falin criticized the United States for abandoning the joint aim of a comprehensive Arab-Israeli settlement, endorsed in UN actions and in the U.S.-Soviet joint statement of October of last year, in favor of a separate Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty without a settlement of the Palestinian problem. "What would be the reaction of the United States if we changed places, if the [Egytian-Israeli] conference took place, not in Camp David but in Zagorsk, 60 miles from Moscow? And if one of the parties would state that the main thing which combined all three

While conceding that the Camp David results reduce the possibility of any Egyptian-Israeli military clash and therefore "may not look that grave" over the next several years, he added, "If we try to look ahead for several decades, I don't think we can be very optimistic He said that "a wide conflict" between Israel and Arab states is likely to continue, complicated by more acute disputes among the

The main purpose of the interview was to get a sense of how Mr. Carter looked and felt about his presidency at the midpoint of his term. He looks older and thinner than when he came to town, but also more confident and serene.

Still in Transit

The United States also buys it. So far this year about 900,000 barrels a day have entered the United States from Iran, accounting for about 10 percent of oil imports and about 5 percent of total oil consumption. Iran is also an important supplier to Israel and South Africa.

An actual shortage in these countries would not be felt for some time, however, because a considerable amount of Iranian oil is still in summit which ended its four-day nies dealing with Israel, along the same lines as the long-standing Arab League boycott of non-Arab firms trading with the Jewish state.

The Arab League will hold no more formal meetings in Cairo be-cause of Mr. Sadar's plans for peace with Israel, the league's sec-retary-general, Mahmoud Riad, announced in Cairo today on return from the Baghdad summit.

Wire dispatches also quoted Mr. Riad as saying that when the peace treaty was signed, Arab foreign ministers would meet in Baghdad to discuss moving the Arab League headquarters out of Cairo. "The Arabs have decided that it would not be logical to keep the league headquarters in Egypt, where there will be an Israeli Embassy." he said.] Automatic Application

The decision on automatic application represented a victory for the radicals. Throughout the summit and the foreign ministers' conference earlier in the week, the moderates, led by oil giant Saudi Arabia, had sought to avoid any automatic sanctions.

They had argued that only if and when Mr. Sadat actually signed a separate peace would there be need even to consider punitive steps.

The moderates even insisted on sending a last-ditch mission to Cairo Saturday to dissuade Mr. Sadat from signing. Much to the radi-cals' delight, the Egyptian leader bluntly refused to receive the emissaries, apparently because the Saudis had neglected to clear the move with Cairo beforehand. Radical Demands

Still, the moderates successfully resisted radical demands to break off diplomatic relations with Cairo. Nor was there any mention of decisions that the radicals had suggested the conference would adopt. For example, they had hinted that Saudi Arabia was considering cutting off the estimated $1 billion to $2 billion in annual grants that help keep Egypt's faltering economy from collapse. Despite Saudi reservations about

Mr. Sadat's separate peace policy, the rulers in Riyadh have even greater fear of the kind of radical egime that might replace him.

Moreover, radical sources conceded that the conference did not discuss the dispatch of Iraqi troops to Syria, which alone could help fill the military breach left by Egypt's defection.

In the early detente era of 1972-74, the United States reversed its long-standing policy of isolating the Soviet Union and, for a time, granted the recognition and role Moscow had long desired, including three summit conferences with U.S. presidents and the unparalleled Kissinger-era intimacies of secret meetings and messages. In calling for a resumption of special superpower relationships, the Russians made it clear that they are not prepared to give up their allegiance to Communist parties and liberation movements. And, while saying it is not a grand design or necessary pattern for repetition. they would not foreclose the use of Cuban troops and Soviet airlifts and supplies in new situations if conditions require.

Nevertheless, the suggestion was made that, despite differences of ideology and national interest, there is room in many cases for "mutual understanding" between the United States and the Soviet Union that could minimize or prevent dangerous clashes. Mr. Falin and Georgi Arbatov, director of the Institute of United

Turner Accused of Distorting CIA Reports

By David Binder

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6 (WP) Adm. Stansfield Turner, director of the CIA, is being accused in the intelligence community of distorting reports to make them dovetail with the Carter administration's foreign policy. He denies the allegations.

In a number of mistances, according to the critic of Adm. Turner in the intelligence community, he has "asked the community to redo the estimates or has rewritten them and sent them on without further reference to the National Foreign Intelligence Board, or he has sent them back to convince, cajole or bully the other participants into alterna-tive estimates." As a result, this official and others said, there have been delays in the production of concept at the beginning, and I res-

One redrafting that caused con-

There was another controversy last year over the national estimate on Soviet intentions in the Indian Ocean, which was also held up for redrafting by Adm. Turner and ended up with what some termed a predictable bias toward gloom. People thought they were dealing with the lord high admiral," a Defense Department analyst remarked.

One of those critical of Adm Turner put the situation this way: The great trap of intelligence is to search for evidence supporting your own view. Mr. Carter's spending and deficit targets are based on assumptions that the economy will grow at a respectable 3 percent pace next year and that inflation will rise at the 6 percent to 6.5 percent rate that the administration has set as a goal under the wase-price program.

 Deficiencies have been pointed up in the state of the ammunition production base, the government-owned plants that would be depended on to manufacture large quantities of shells and other am-munition to replenish stocks exhausted in the first battles.

The Carter administration has focused much of its defense effort on improving readiness. It is believed that the Russians are close to achieving the capability to launch a tank-led attack on Western Europe with only short warning and, thus, little time for the United States to prepare for the crunch.

Hint Seen of Waning Chinese Support for Cambodia

By Fox Butterfield

HONG KONG, Nov. 6 (NYT) — The unusual composition of a high-level Chinese mission which arrived in Cambodia yesterday suggests that Peking may be offering the embattled Phnom Penh regime less than full support.

The Chinese delegation, whose arrival came two days after the signing of a treaty of friendship aud cooperation between Vietnam and the Soviet Union, is led by Wang Tung-hsing, a deputy chair-man of the Chinese Communist Party and the former commander of Mao Tse-tung's bodyguards. Mr. Wang is the fifth-ranking member of the Chinese hierarchy.

But in recent weeks analysts here believe his authority has been somewhat undermined by the group of veteran party leaders headed by Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping. Mr. Wang has reportedly argued that all Mao's policies must be followed precisely, while

Somewhat Embarrassed There have been other signs this year that, although China is provid-ing economic and military aid to Phnom Penh, the Chinese are somewhat embarrassed by the extremism of the Pol Pot regime.

Mr. Wang's mission, which was not announced beforehand, evidently is China's response to the visit to Moscow last week by Viet-nam's chief leaders, including Le Pham Van Dong, and the signing of the Soviet-Vietnamese treaty.
The treaty contains a clause pledging the two countries to aid each other in the event of attack.

Crackdown on Students, Religious Dissidents

Vietnam has reportedly rein-forced its troop strength greatly along its border with Cambodia this fall with upwards of 120,000 solidiers, in preparation for a possible offensive when the rainy season ends this month. An all-out attack by Vietnam on Cambodia would put China, Phnom Penh's only real supporter, in a serious dilemma.

The new Chinese delegation to Cambodia also has some other curious features. The officially announced list contains no names of military officials, suggesting a de-liberate effort to play down the mil-itary significance of the visit. In addition, Mr. Wang's special-

NEW YORK, Nov. 6 (AP) — Professors at two-year, tax-funded community colleges in suburban Nassau and Westchester counties are paid better than their counterparts at such prestigious institutions as Yale, Princeton, Stanford, Columbia and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, according to a survey released yesterday.

The survey, conducted by the American Association of University Professors, also shows that professors' salaries at Nassau Community College and Westchester Community College are higher than at any two-year college in the nation.

A professor at Westchester Com-

The only school included in the survey where professors made more money was at Harvard, with an av erage $40,900 a year for its full professors. At Stanford, the annual average salary was $38.200, $37,500 at MIT and Columbia, $37,000 at Yale and $36,900 at Princeton.

The commission's report will deal with charges of covert activi-ties by the now defunct Depart-ment of Information. Parliament has been told that these activities were paid for in part by secret funds allocated by then Prime Minister John Vorster.

Mr. Vorster resigned in September because of ill health and is now state president. Evidence released mission, not directly related to the information scandal, indicated that both Mr. Vorster and his former head of state security, Gen. Hendrik van den Bergh, were aware of some of the covert activities. But the immediate focus has been on Connie Mulder, who as minister of information is alleged to have been directly involved in the project which has caused most public outrage here.

This was the alleged loan of 12 million rand ($14 million) by the department to millionaire Louis Luyt to set up a pro-government newspaper, the Citizen.

Criticism of Russian

A possible model, the Turkish opium poppy eradication program of the early 1970s, was based on U.S. government subsidies of $15 a kilogram of opium, then priced at $35 a kilogram.

A similar program here would prove expensive. In the last three years, the price of Afghan opium has increased from $30 to $220 a kilogram.

In a rare criticism of the Soviet Union, which usually gets unre-served praise from Afghan officials, Mr. Wali said that the Russians "should take an interest" in the opium problem because of the closeness of the growing area to their borders. He clearly suggested that the Russians had shown no such interest so far.

Mr. Wali praised West Germany, which provides technicians for the UN program, and Denmark, which has given $350,000 to treat Afghan addicts. Their numbers are conservatively estimated at 100,000, although some specialists believe that perhaps half the male population of northern Afghanistan is addicted.

But at the same time, he warned.

Wage negotiations covering near-ly half a million Teamsters have as-sumed a critical importance in the government's anti-inflation efforts because the Teamsters are the first of the major unions whose labor contracts expire during the heavy bargaining calendar next year.

Contract settlements in the major unions have been running at more than 10 percent a year. A three-year coal industry settlement last winter was at 39 percent, and Teamster president Frank Fitzsimmons had said at the time that his union wanted comparable gains.

Moderation by Fitzsimmons

But since President Carter's new anti-inflation program was an-nounced Oct. 24, Mr. Fitzsimmons, who has been wooed intensively by the White House, has taken a more moderate position. This is in con-

Mr. Meany reiterated his opposition to the Carter policies, reserving special criticism for Mr.
Carter's economic advisers who, he said, spoke "gobbledygook" and had "failed" in their responsibili-ties to the president because of the worsening of inflation.

He said that the AFL-CIO had never been brought fully into the picture of the newest anti-inflation effort and had never been consulted on the wage insurance feature by which the administration hopes to sell the program to workers.

The Year of Proposition 13

If there is a single large and unifying theme to the midterm election campaigns being waged for Congress and for state and local office all over the United States this fall, it is the taxpayers' revenge. Candidates are falling all over themselves to establish their bona fides as tax-cutters, rebaters and general scourges of politics-as-usual and government bureaucracy wherever either may choose to raise its ugly head. The good news is that at least Proposition 13 fever has compelled a lot of self-satisfied elected and appointed officials to take seriously legitimate public grievance with arrogant, overblown and blowsy government. The bad news is that in many political quarters the reaction has been as mindless and self-indulgent as the practices to which the taxpayers were objecting in

We are not thinking here of the stampede to get on the winning side or the fact that numbers of politicians have made spinarounds on the subject of government spending that would make a whirling dervish dizzy. Conservatives who complain that their issue has been "stolen" by liberal Democrats will just have to find another shoulder to cry on. That kind of theft has been the political game as long as anyone can remember, and in its way it is even an evidence of success, since it means the (stolen) position has prevailed. If the originators of the tax-cutting fervor couldn't survive their own success, it's too bad from their point of view, but hardly something the rest of us need to put on the national worry list.

There are better things to worry about in this year's political climate. And chief among them is the way so many office seekers are responding to the legitimate message of the fed-up taxpayer with a pandering hymn to greed and encouragement of voters to believe themselves the persecuted targets of a deliberate government conspiracy. Yessir — the 1978 siren song seems to go --- they have really been doing a number on you. You know who we all mean by "they." And meanwhile, they are all sitting back getting richer and fatter. And nothing gets better for you. And if you make an honest dollar, they just take it away. And it doesn't need to be like that -not if you elect good old John J. Freelunch to Et cetera. In our opinion, it's not the fact that so many liberal Democrats or equally improbable converts have seen "the light" that is disturbing. It's the nature of the light they appear to have seen. There is and has been plenty wrong with many of the programs and much of the policy that liberal and middle-road politicians have put in place over the past two decades. An honest acknowledgement of this fact and a straightforward effort to correct it would be the most welcome development in our politics. But (as it was in California pre-Proposition 13) there was, first, a stubborn unwillingness to concede this much and then (after the voters indicated they wouldn't put up with it any longer) an uncritical and undiscriminating rush to condemn government and all its works as some great alien, usurping monster that appeared out of nowhere and needed to be whipped back, if not eliminated.

Maybe it is asking too much of election campaigns to wish they would be based on some truths likely to be as valid in March and August as they seemed to be in November. Nevertheless, however the voting may come out in all those thousands of precincts across the country today, we get a sense that a good thing has been squandered in the midterm elections of 1978 - that an opportunity has been blown. It was an opportunity to have that long-awaited (and still awaited) debate for which the country is overdue on how to reasses the programs and redirect the energy and money that went into the legislative outpouring of the Great Society years and their Republican aftermath.

Put it down as just one more irony, that a new wave of candidates professing not to be politicians and an old wave of politicians professing not to be politicians either, politicized what might have been a real breath of fresh air in our national debate over possibilities and values. What we ended up with most places was a narrow pitch to self-interest defined in the narrowest way imaginable. When all those voter-taxpayers who have been promised what can't be delivered and told it is just being kept from them by a conspiracy of government find out they've been had yet again . . . well, what's going to hap-

THE WASHINGTON POST.

With publication of the Fraser subcommitee's report on the South Korean "influence campaign," it becomes possible to draw a bottom line on "Koreagate." Frankly, it wasn't what it was once cracked up to be. First to insure that U.S. support would not wane in the wake of Vietnam, then to gild the authoritarian regime in Seoul, the Koreans undertook to influence key Americans. The techniques, ranging from routine to sordid, pretty much reflected what the CIA used to do. The Koreans, diligent students of U.S.

ways, ably learned them there. The difference was that the Koreans did their act just as the United States was ending its own and entering an intense phase of criticism of precisely those tactics the Koreans were trying to emulate. Few Americans had foreseen this development; it would have taken a very prescient Korean to anticipate it. So the Koreans walked into a trap. Their campaign was exposed. Rep. Donald Fraser, D-Minn., who investigated for 20 months, suggests that Seoul's campaign was "born in overreaction and died of counterproductivity." Not even the exposure undermined American aid for Korea, though it did curdle relations for several years. That aid was sustained was a relief for all those who feel, as we do, that the United States has a continuing interest in the stability of East Asia.

We wish the Fraser report had made this point better. As it is, the report criticizes Seoul for having contemplated exporting arms and (in the past) making its own nuclear bomb — as though a small fearful client with a shaky patron were not entitled even to weigh greater self-reliance as a partial security alternative. The report also suggests suspiciously that Korea has become too formidable an economic competitor - an unworthy rebuke of a country that, after all, followed precisely the path of economic development laid out for it by the United States.

The activities of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon come in for heavy comment in the Fraser report. He is still active in a way that the official Korean influence campaign is not; his approaches to young people are of particular concern. The report indicates that the Moon "organization" has violated numerous laws, and if this is so, it should be brought to account.

Mideast Breakthrough

The completion of the draft of a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt is undoubtedly a historic breakthrough in the Middle East. It seemed improbable even 11 months ago, after President Sadat's startling visit to Jerusalem, partly because until President Carter took the leaders of the two protagonist states to Camp David last month, negotiations between them seemed doomed to failure. With the removal of Egypt from the lineup of states confronting Israel, the outbreak of another full-scale Middle East war becomes less likely.

- From the Financial Times (London).

Sometimes it almost appears as if there is scarcely any limit to the lengths which Mr. Begin's Israeli Cabinet is prepared to go in mounting obstacles in the path toward a peace settlement with Egypt. It is no wonder that the Carter administration is deeply disturbed by the decision to strengthen Israeli settlements on the West Bank. Plans are also announced to move the prime minister's and foreign minister's offices to East Jerusalem. . . Strengthening Israeli settle-ments on the West Bank during the negotiations with Egypt would be, in spirit if not letter, a direct contravention of the pledge Mr. Begin gave to Mr. Carter and President Sadat during the Camp David summit, that there would be no new settlements established during the negotiations... . The folly of the Israeli announcements is that nothing could be better calculated to undermine Mr. Sadat and at the same time alienate the two Arab countries — Jordan and Saudi Arabia — on which a wider peace mainly depends. Israeli apologists claim that it was necessary in order to get Cabinet approval for the draft treaty - already, apparently, heavily amended. If that was really so, God help Israel.

Even if Japan were to be successful at sea -- and despite her new ships it is a big if - she could not carry her victory much further. # News, Politics and Unesco's Wrong Turn of Free Flow of Information, the Head of the division, Rene Maheu. had just returned from attending the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information in Geneva. That large-scale conference, the first international effort to chart a new course for information in the postwar world, ended on a euphoric note with agreement reached on three draft conventions and 43 resolutions dealing broadly with issues stemming from the rights and responsibilities of the mass media. These primarily political aspects of freedom of information, Mr. Maheu explained to the newcomer, would thenceforth be pursued by the UN, while Unesco's domain was to be the more technical work involved in attempting to ease the flow of information across fron-

By Julian Behrstock

At the end of that year, Mr. Maheu was given a new and more central assignment in Unesco, which marked the beginning of his meteoric rise to the post of director-general. I, in turn, took over the Division of Free Flow of Information and, although certain other responsibilities were later appended, that remained my bailiwick until my retirement from Unesco a cou-

As Unesco's General Conference, meeting in Paris this month, focuses on the highly political draft declaration on the mass media, which has already occasioned passionate debate, tempestuous gov-ernmental walkouts and vitriolic comment from the world press, let attempt an insider's view of what happened since those halcyon days when Unesco confined itself to the "technical" issues.

The Way It Worked

The division of effort between the UN and Unesco, to which Mr. Maheu alluded, held fast for many years thereafter. At the UN, the General Assembly addressed itself to the adoption of the three draft conventions emerging from the 1948 Geneva Conference. The Commission on Human Rights set up a Subcommission on Freedom of Information and the Press that took up the equally problem-studded recommendations of the Geneva Conference, such as the establish-ment of "an international court of honor for information personnel, means of protecting news sources and the study of measures to pro-mote the dissemination of "true information." The UN Economic and Social Council began work on an International Code of Ethics designed to establish "a standard of professional conduct" for those engaged in the dissemination of news. But all of these brave initiatives foundered as the winds prevailing in Geneva in 1948 gave way to the increasingly icy blasts of the Cold War. Only one of the three draft conventions proposed at Geneva was ever adopted and opened for signature and even that one never succeeded in acquiring the adher-ence of more than a handful of countries. The Subcommission on Freedom of Information and the Press held five sessions, failed to reach agreement on anything of consequence and disappeared leav-ing hardly a trace in history. The Draft International Code of Ethics was referred by the UN to national and international professional associations and information enterprises "for such action as they might deem appropriate" — and the an-swer to that was such a deafening silence that the UN simply interred the draft code. Despite this depressing record, no one at the UN was prepared to close the book on what had once been characterized by the General Assembly as "the touchstone of all freedoms to which the United Nations is consecrated." Hence, freedom of information remained a regular item on each year's agenda of the General Assembly but when the debate resulted in no more than bitter confrontation between diametrically opposed Western and Soviet concepts, a totally unspoken understanding between both sides emerged. As from 1960 onward, while the item was solemnly placed each year on the agenda of the General Assembly, and even flagged for "priority," it was equally solemnly, each year, deferred without discussion to the succeed-In the meantime, while the UN floundered, Unesco was pursuing educational materials. Unesco made itself the spokesman in the UN system for the reduction of postal charges on printed matter and for the lowering of rates for the international dissemination of press messages. A special program for books culminated in the world-wide celebration of International Book Year. In addition, Unesco attempted to help the developing countries to build up their own mass media. Seventy percent of the world's pop-ulation lacked the physical facilities needed to make freedom of information a reality. Unesco concluded in its publication World Communications, and the organization set about devising remedial measures. Conferences, the first of their kind, were held in all the developing regions to draw up plans for the ex-pansion of national press, radio, film and, ultimately, television

Of particular interest, in view of the renewed attention being given these days to the development of national news agencies, were two conferences held for this very purpose, one at Bangkok in 1961, for the Asian region, and the other in Tunisia, in 1963, for Africa. Both conferences resulted in the establishing of regional alliances de-signed to pool news and resources among national agencies and to help in the creation of agencies

The beginning of the end of the Unesco's ivory tower was not to become manifest until the mid-1960s. It was the advent of space communication with its capacity for in-stantaneous worldwide transmissions that put Unesco itself into orbit. A space communication con-ference held in 1965 produced a re-port that was published by Unesco with the prefatory comment that the time had come to move beyond the techniques of communication to "a common concern with the content of what is transmitted." More than that: "It is evident that in enhancing the power of the mass media to reach and influence vast audiences, space communication imposes a commensurate responsi-bility for the media to be used for the benefit of all."

Prior Consent The 1965 meeting set Unesco on a path that was to lead to the adoption, in 1972, of an international declaration of guiding principles on the use of satellite broadcasting for the free flow of information, the spread of education and greater cultural exchange. Oddly enough, although the declaration embodied the principle that international satellite transmissions required the prior consent of recipient countries - a principle contrary to the free flow of information in the strict sense - the text never aroused much opposition expect among a couple of diehard spokesmen for the U.S. television industry.

The 1972 General Conference also adopted a resolution proposed by the Soviet Union and Belorussia requesting the preparation of a draft "Declaration on Fundamental Principles Governing the Use of no purpose, least of all in the for-the Mass Media in Strengthening mulation of a declaration whose the Mass Media in Survey of the Survey of the Mass Media in Survey of the Mass Media in Survey of the Survey of the Survey of the Survey of Commission for the Study of Co had taken place in roles played within the UN system.

As for the subsequent story,

Unesco's experience, not surpris-ingly, proved to be just as divisive and inustrating as the UN's. For a brief time, it looked as though there might have been a measure of agreement when a committee made up of experts from a dozen countries, including the Soviet Union and the United States, met in March, 1974, and, in a spirit of give-and-take, drew up the text of a draft declaration that perhaps could have done the trick. But when that fragile compromise reached the General Conference, it was hit by a ton of amendments and, thus battered, was referred to intergovernmental conference

The 1975 gathering, attended by delegations from 85 countries, had scant enough prospects of arriving at agreement and these were doomed by the introduction of a totally irrelevant clause equating Zionism with racism. When voted, that clause occasioned the walkout of a dozen Western countries, but they returned to the fray at the Nairobi General Conference of 1976. There, after acrimonious and inconclusive debates that echoed those of a quarter of a century ear-lier at the UN, the draft declaration was handed over to the directorgeneral for revision and resubmission to the next General Conference. It is that revised text which is now coming up for discussion in

The Director-General of Unesco, Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, has called for a broad consensus on the draft declaration and it is to be hoped that his appeal will be heeded. But if not? It is here that the experience of the international community over the past 30 years should point to the pitfalls. Recriminations semantic arguments, procedural wrangling, split votes — these serve of practical ways of seeing to it that people are better and more truly informed.

The detonation of a neutron bomb at a distance of 900 meters has proved to cause "immediate transient incapacitation," which is defined as inducing within five minutes a total inability to perform physically demanding tasks. #### Pinched Pensioners

It is a duty of civilized societies to help unlucky groups bear the burden of mass catastrophies, such as fire, flood, hurricane, drought, or simply being underprivileged. Americans have shown singular magnanimity in this respect.

The more difficult is to understand the catatonic lack of humane helpfulness toward our expatriate pensioners trapped by the precipi-tous tumble of the dollar. Many of them can now buy with their depre-ciation- and inflation-ravaged dollar less than half what they could five or six years ago.

The righteous answer is: "Why don't they come home?"

As if their expatriation had been an act of treason! But was it? After having lived and worked for a lifetime in America, and pos-

Not according to Abe Lincoln: "Never consider an immigrant to become a loyal American citizen, unless he retains his love for his motherland." Were Lafayette or Kosciusko disloyal for having left America?

The expatriated pensioners had sold and auctioned off their snug home in America. Is it fair now to expect them to build anew a fragile nest for possibly the last months of their lives? For most of them their resources would be insufficient for

Science Panel In U.S. Warns On Saccharin

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6 (AP) -The National Academy of Sciences has concluded that saccharin must be viewed as a potential cause of cancer in humans, not only because it is a weak cancer-causing agent itself but because it promotes the cancer-causing activity of other substances.

The scientific body, which undertook its review of the popular sugar substitute at the request of Congress, expressed concern that onethird of children under 10 are saccharin users and may be subjected to the greatest risk.

committee concluded that further laboratory studies to establish the cancer-causing potential of saccharin are not needed under existing law. It added that scientists har lamprous rately predict, on the basis of animal studies, just how dangerous specific carcinogens are to humans.
Studies with laboratory rats show that saccharin is a carcinogen of low potency when compared to other known cancer-causing agents, it said, but added that saccharin's possible action as a promoter of cancer may be more important.

The panel did not make any recommendations about what action the government should take regardsaccharin - the last artificial sweetener allowed on the U.S. market. Its findings tended to bolster the Food and Drug Administration, which sought to ban saccharin in the spring of 1977 before Congress stepped in and declared an 18-month moratorium pending further study.

The Russians do not have the rocket power to launch a large space station into orbit intact, but could place four or five big structures in similar orbits to be assembled into a space station.

The Russians have said that they plan to orbit space stations that will be manned for long periods by the same crew, rather than visited every few months by different crews. They have said that it is not economical to revisit the same space station four or five times a

Yehudi Menuhin to Sell 3 of His Violins

ONDON, Nov. 6 (IHT) — Wednesday evening at 9, Sotheby's will sell three of Yehudi Menuhin's 18th-century violins, including his finest, an instrument made by Giuseppe Guarneri of Cremona in 1739.

Is the greatest living violonist contemplating retirement? One is reassured he isn't, so one wonders what these centuries-old instruments mean to him and why he wants to part with them.

There is an Henry Jamesian manner about Menuhin. His American briskness is tempered by oldworld courtesy; he expresses himself concisely, with the swift ele-gance one imagines James had. Menuhin holds honorary degrees from 11 British universities, and he is a Knight of the British Empire. But he is prone to doing tionesta-blishmentarian things: He went to India in the early '50s, for example, and raised $74,000 for the Famine Fund: he gave concerts for the United Nations with Ravi Shankar

The twin peaks of that range were Antonio Stradivari and Giuseppe Guarneri del Gesu. "Each instrument has a personalifinest instrument a musician can ty, although there are family

Bubbling Vivian Reed: 'Shining a Little Brighter'

By Norma Snow

PARIS, Nov. 6 (IHT) - If Paris's reputation for showcas-United States talents and sending them back as stars holds true, then Vivian Reed has got it made. Virtually every review of "Bub-bling Brown Sugar" had nothing but cheers for her performance. But while her onstage role gives the multi-talented comedienne a chance to show all her stuff, a more serious side emerges across a table in the noisy dining room of the Ho-tel Madeline Palace. And that side of the lady reveals the drive that has propelled her toward success

She is charming and likeable, al-though one is aware of why Vinette Carroll, the director of "Don't Bother Me I Can't Cope," once told her, "Vivian, don't expect to make friends. It may start out that way but it won't end like that."

Any beautiful, ambitious, rising young star is bound to run a collison course with envy. Miss Reed is an integral part of the show, yet she's not — something about her makes her a person apart from the rest of the cast. It is star presence, and she projects it onstage and off. "I've worked hard on my craft. I've put in a lot of blood and sweat, and there have been a lot of disappointments. But as a woman, one has to be a strong individual to be able to cope with success. In any show, somebody is bound to come out shining a little brighter."

'On the Spot'

In 1969, while she was still a classical-voice student at Juilliard, she made the change to pop after a chance outing to a Harlem club called Pauline's Interlude. "It wa the sort of club where you could just get up and sing, so I did. I sang something classical, then I sang the only two pop songs I knew. I saw how people responded to me, and I liked their reaction. I was underage at the time, but the manager didn't know. He hired me on the spot."

She stayed for seven months, be fore switching over to pop for good a year or so later. She accepted a contract with Epic records. "It was easy to make the change, because I had a gospel background that came from singing in a little Baptist church in Pittsburgh, where I was born and raised. But my voice really went through some changes, like chronic hoarseness for four or five years before it finally settled into what it was going to do. I was very good in classical music, but I have no regrets. The training has put me a step ahead of a lot of other people. I've never wanted to go back to the classics. I'm very happy with what I'm doing."

Last year, she did a special show for Prince Rainier and Princess Grace of Monaco; she's worked with Frank Sinatra and Mike Douglas in Las Vegas, done TV specials in Europe and the United States and starred on Broadway; she has a current U.S. hit in an al-bum called "Vivian Reed, Another

It would be a challenge to do a straight role without the benefit of music, but I'm talking about a good, classy film."

The level of trading continued at a moderate pace, indicating that there has not been any further rush to cover short-dollar positions following last Wednesday's announce-ment of a package of measures by the United States to support the currency. Technical factors were largely responsible for the dollar's appreciation today.

Against the Deutsche mark, the dollar rose to 1.9043 DM in London dealings from 1.8910 DM late Friday but was little changed from its Frankfurt fixing of 1.9045 DM. It reached an intraday high of 1.9160 DM, however. The Bundes-bank bought about $7 million at the Frankfurt fixing.

The dollar turned in even stronger performances against other major currencies. It rose 3.12 centimes to 1.6475 Swiss francs, 1.87 cents to 2.0575 guilders and 4 centimes to 4.3250 French francs. Against the yen, it climbed to 189.375 in Tokyo from 189.05 yen late Friday and gained further in European trading to 190.18 yen.

The Canadian dollar added 15 points to 85.66 U.S. cents. Gold, meanwhile, fell sharply to finish at $210.75 an ounce com-pared with $215.50 Friday but was up slightly from $210 at the after-noon fixing and $208 in the morn-

Sterling showed surprising firmness despite the official rejection of Ford Motor's 16.5-percent pay offer. Part of the reason, dealers said, was due to expectations of further U.K. interest rate boosts. It finished at $1.9780, down from $1.9845 late Friday but above its opening of $1.9645.

Working Paper

It is claimed that the document, meant only for internal cabinet circulation, was a Treasury "working paper," and did not represent the personal views of the chancellor or prime minister. The Treasury paper reportedly says the effect of accepting a system of more fixed exchange rates would be to reduce Britain's competitiveness against the United States and Japan.

Because membership in the EMS might tend to keep the pound's valne artifically high, more restrictive monetary and fiscal policies to help the balance of payments would probably be needed, it reportedly states. It assumes that if Britain were to stay out of the plan, there would have to be continued depreciation of sterling to take account of high inflation rates and increasing inability to compete on nonprice factors, such as productivity.

The study also assumes that inside EMS, Britain's partners would resist major sterling devaluations to help their own competitiveness.

PARIS. Nov. 6 (AP-DJ) — France's broadly defined M-2 money supply rose 1.7 percent in July from June to 1.05 trillion francs (about $243 billion), the Bank of France reported today. But when he returned to Paris in early 1977, he said he was told privately by one of his superiors that he had been blacklisted by the bank and that none of his allegations had been acted upon. At that point, he threatened for the first time to make public his charges un-

The next night, Mr. Claman and Mr. Pomeroy both met with him. For the next three weeks, he heard nothing. He then called Mr. Claman in New York to inquire as to the status of the investigation.

"His only response was to state that he was holding my personnel file in front of him at that moment and that he and Mr. Huntington would take care of me if I would forget the whole affair," Mr. Edwards said in a memo to another Citibank official. (Both Mr. Claman and Mr. Pomeroy have refused to comment on the case.)

At that meeting, which lasted all day, Mr. Edwards went over the alleged kickback scheme in detail with the help of documents he had obtained along the way. He also told the two men that there were at least two persons who could corroborate his story. He says the two investigators told him they would take note of the kickback charges but would not make written reference to the problem of 'parking' transactions in tax havens, with Mr. Sweeney telling him, "If you bring this matter up, it will not go in your favor." (Mr. Armstrong was not at his Peris office which eaid not at his Paris office, which said he could not be reached.)

Two days later, Mr. Edwards learned that the man he had accused of kickbacks in Paris, Jean Pierre Delaet, had contacted one of the two men he said could corroborate his story and informed him that he, Mr. Delaet, was fully briefed on Mr. Edwards's meeting in London. Mr. Delaet then report edly asked the corroborator — a former Citibank Paris employee to come to Paris and state that he did not know of any irregularities at that branch.

MEXICO_CITY, Nov. 6 (Reuters) - The state-owned Mexican telephone company, Telmex, said in would cease buying equip-ment from International Telephone & Telegraph until ITT cleared up allegations that it had bribed government officials here.

The Telmex statement sent to the local subsidiary of ITT followed reports from the United States that Mexican officials had received millions of dollars from ITT and the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency between 1970 and 1976. Telmex also asked ITT to clear up whether it had paid bribes after 1976 and to name the officials it had bribed during the 1970-76 administration of President Luis Echeverria.

Your Opportunity Very High Earnings

An introduction to the growth industry International Freight Containerisation.

Ten years ago the world's major trading nations completed an effort which had occupied much of the previous decade: the ratification of uniform standards for intermodel containers. This action was the most important in the modern history of transportation.

Containerisation has enjoyed a geometric growth rate during its first decade of existence. In fact, the total container population has doubled every several years. Over the last five years, more containers have come into existence annually than existed in total a decade ago. It has been estimated that the total container population, in service, will be some 2 million units by the end of 1978 - compared with a quarter million in 1968.

As the Economist recently put it: "A gradual decrease in conventional cargo has been matched by a rapid increase in containerised cargo. From 1970-77 conventional cargo in Britain fell from 20m tonnes to 17m, while containerised cargo rose from 12m to 17m."

The container leasing industry. During the last 5 years, Container Leasing Companies have bought substantially more containers than have shipping lines and other carriers.

The definitive reference authority in the field of shipping containers if Jane's Freight Containers (as Jane's is the authority in other important fields such as the world's aircraft and fighting ships). Edited by Patrick Finlay FCIT (who incidentally also serves as a consultant to CTC), the latest 608-page Tenth Edition provides facts and figures: "...about 300,000 20st equivalent units came into service in 1977. The lessors' share is estimated to be between 40 and 45% compared with between 30 and 35% in 1974 and about 20% in 1970. By 1980 the lessors should own about 50% of the containers in service."

The Private Ownership Concept. An investor, be it a company or an individual, establishes a leasing company, purchases cargo handling equipment and appoints an agent to carry out certain aspects of the leasing of the equipment. The agent recommends various leases available to the owner for his equipment and at the direction of the owner and on his behalf, leases the equipment to responsible international shipping

The leasing of freight containers and related equipment is historically an industry, which produces a high return on capital invested. You may say, however, that such return by itself is of little interest, are there any

Individuals and companies have different circumstances concerning taxation and any general statement can be dangerous and give an incorrect impression. However, with advice from your professional advisor with knowledge of your tax affairs, you may find that it may be possible for you to obtain certain tax benefits.

Tax benefits notwithstanding, it is the return on investment which should be stressed. Containers, which cost $1,000 just a few years ago, earn as much per day now as new containers costing three times that amount today, and can show a return of up to 30%p.a.

It is this and other factors, which lead us to the conclusion that, because of increasing demand and a chronic world shortage of containers rental income will not only keep pace with inflation, but actually run ahead of it in the foreseeable years. Your Opportunity for "Very High Earnings." In conclusion let us again quote Jane's Freight Containers, *Earnings of the leasing companies in 1976/77 (latest figures available) were very high mainly because of a high utilisation of their equipment due to expanding world trade and the introduction of new container shipping routes." Jane's also make an additional and significant observation:

"Eight major lessors account for about 90% of the worldwide operation. Their annual reports indicate, that there is a great deal of expansion still to be expected in the world container business."

In short, we believe there could hardly be a better time for you to seriously consider investment/ownership in containers, and our total programme makes it feasible for you to do so easily and conveniently and to the financial extent you wish, simply by employing multiples of the surprisingly low cost of a single container.

By Anthony Burgess. Little, Brown. 272 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Charles Champlin

NINETEEN eighty-four stands as a kind of flood gauge, erected in 1948 by the late English novelist George Orwell, against which to measure the rising peril of big government suppressing the little guy.

Orwell's "1984" gave us a year to dread and Big Brother as a reason to dread it. BB as a symbol of the eavesdropping, privacy-invading, thought-controlling state has had an even wider currency than the Orwell's England was Airstrip One, part of Oceania which was one of three powers dividing the world. Unlike Huxley's hateful but efficient "Brave New World," Airstrip One was a mixture of inefficiency, Dickensian squalor and some slight technological advance (mostly two-way television).

Hate Weeks and constant war kept the mindless proles quiescent. Thought Police stamped out any glimmers of unorthodoxy in a mid-dle class that existed mostly to rewrite the past. The party of Big Brother ruled invincibly.

Brother ruled invincibly.

We are 30 years closer to Orwell's future, which is now only an Olympics away. How does his prophecy look? Another English novelist-essayist, Anthony Burgess, who offered some of his own forebodings in "A Clockwork Orange," gives Orwell a mixed and provoca-tive review in "1985"—the earliest in what seems likely to be a long series of reassessments.

The Burgess book is in fact a slim (137 pages) but highly readable black comic novella bracketed fore and aft by the author's Socraiic dialogues with himself (occasionally disguised as an American interviewer) about "1984."

"Nineteen eighty-four," says Burgess, "will not be like that at all." It won't be any more tolerable but only tetrible in a different way. Nightmare of Inefficiency

Burgess' 1985 is also a nightmare

of inefficiency and shortages, but the troubles arise from what might be called a dictatorship of the proletariat gone mad.

Britain is now called Tukland (for the United Kingdon) or, pref-erably, Tucland (for Trades Union Congress) and instead of Big Brother there is Brother Bill, the Symbolic Worker who smiles vacuously from posters everywhere.

The country is given over to what Burgess calls "holistic syndicalism," dominated by massive unions which make life a series of catastrophic strikes. (The hero's wife the just died in a hospital fire dur. has just died in a hospital fire, during a firemen's strike.)
Inflation is horrific. Television is all-pervasive and explicit. "Road Floozy" is a favorite series of the hero's daughter. The Arabs own al-most everything, including North Sea oil production, Al-Hilton, Al-Klaridges and a pub suspiciously called Al-Bulnbush. Parliament is powerless.

Majority rule controls grammar and to say "you were" instead of "you was" is a misdemeanor.

Orwell's hero was Winston Smith named with irony for Churchill and the common man. Burgess' hero, a history teacher whose subject no longer exists, is Bev Jones — Bev for Beveridge (of the Beveridge Plan), Bevan or Bevin, all Labor Party heroes, plus the other most common man.

This 1985 is not greatly different from the druggy and violent near-tomorrow of "Clockwork Orange." (Jones is mugged early on by polite blacks speaking schoolboy Latin.) The Burgess of the dialogues professes to be unappy with "Clockwork Orange" — too didactic and linguistically showy, he complains

Solution to Previous Puzzle

But it foretells the rages "1985." The point, philosophics of the earlier novel was that so: was better off with man free whole — even if violent with man captive, lobotomized tame, even if safer. It was a absolutely libertarian but not c fortably liberal, because it de the possibility of a benevolent all-powerful government. The contrast between "I and "1985" comes down at last difference in private post Orwell, a socialist but an antimunist, still saw the world div into Us and Them, rulers proles, and thought the slim of avoiding 1984 or overturni lay with the proles.

From his own stance in w the libertarian and the conserv are invisible and indistinguish Burgess argues that Orwell op a gap in society which does no ist in fact.

"The dockworker and the n ist belong to the same organ called society, and society, v ever it thinks, cannot get a without either of us," he writes in the gap, says Burgess, O has built his improbable tyrar Nothing to worry about, the Ah, well, he didn't say that,

He invents a word and calls his cacotopian nightmare (car. pian from the Greek "bad" place"). It could come about throu skillful appeal to the "phili anti-intellectual core of the A can electorate," says Burgess i ..... epilogue to the novella. Or ..... more generally follow the great conventional war if, as gess thinks possible, there is or " "

"We have to be on our gu concludes Burgess, joining h with Orwell across the years despite their differences.

There is probably more of gest revealed than of Orwell fied in "1985," and his vision. least as despairing as Orwell's? in some ways ugher. Despite the echoes of clitis<sup>14</sup>

Exit Bobby Hull, on Ice Skates

By Joseph Durso

NEW YORK, Nov. 6 (NYT) -In this era of instant success, it may be a trifle difficult to grasp. But when Bobby Hull retired as a hockey player the other day, these were the numbers: 1,012 goals and 988 assists in 1,623 games during 22 years on ice skates.

Only one other man in the history of professional hockey has whacked 1,000 pucks past the goal-tenders, and that's Gordie Howe, who's 11 years older than Hull. But not even Gordie Howe cut the same dashing figure as the "Golden Jet," and few athletes in any game have made the same impact on the business of sports.

Babe Ruth and his bat rescued baseball from the brink of the Chicago Black Sox scandal after the World Series of 1919. Red Grange switched from the University of Illinois to the Chicago Bears in 1925, and put pro football on the map. Joe Namath switched from the University of Alabama to the New York Jets in 1965, and put the American Football League on the map. And Muhammad Ali knocked out Sonny Liston in 1964, and led prize fighting into the age of plenty.

Back in the Old Days

You can't exactly fit Robert Marvin Hull into this lineup of revolutionaries, but he comes close. He got into the National Hockey League in 1957, when he was 18 years old and the league numbered only six teams. He was a superstar with the Chicago Black Hawks in 1972, when the World Hockey Association was formed with one towering attraction: himself. He was a

In Title Fights

GENEVA, Nov. 6 (Reuters) -The European Boxing Union has tightened up health requirements for boxers in European title fights following the death of an Italian fighter, Angelo Jacopucci, and several recent accidents.

Fighters in title matches mus now be at least 21 years old, the number of rounds will be reduced from 15 to 12 and the official fight doctor will be able to intervene with the referee if he is concerned about a boxer's health.

The boxing union, which decided not to alter the weight of gloves, is to study the possibility of allowing a fighter's manager to request an extra pause once during the bout for a two-point forfeit.

sports franchises began to sprout shore of Lake Ontario. He was one like supermarkets. With television of 11 children in the family, and his and the jet plane bringing sports to sister Judy once reported that "the customers, leagues cloned population of Point Anne is about themselves into "conferences" and conferences into "divisions." Meanwhile, the established leagues were challenged by new ones that bid for a piece of the action and that lured away many of the name

The NHL had already expanded under the pressure of the new money when the decade began. It went from half a dozen teams to 14, with Vancouver somehow placed in the "East" and Philadelphia somehow situated in the "West." But even that mixed-up geography became further confused when the World Hockey Association was created as a rival league with franchises scat-tered all over North America.

To survive, though, the associa-tion needed something more than franchises, arenas, players and telethe time, and you can't do that up

got credibility when the Winnipeg

So, armed with a 10-year contract, Hull jumped — and the face of pro hockey changed radically. None of this would have worked Hull had not been a virtuoso performer. And he began that phase of his career in the tiny Canadian

DENVER, Nov. 6 (UPI) — Quarterback Matt Robinson passed 75 yards to Wesley Walker for a touchdown late in the fourth quarter here yesterday to cap a sec-ond-half rally and lift the New York Jets to a 31-28 upset victory over the Denver Broncos in the National Football League.

Robinson, who has been starting in place of the injured Richard Todd, hit Walker with 5:20 remaining in the final period. The victory improved New York's record to 6-4, while Denver fell to 6-4 and a first-place tie with Oakland in the AFC West Division.

With six seconds remaining in the game, Broncos' place-kicker Jim Turner missed a 42-yard field goal attempt that would have sent Denver into its fourth overtime

Oilers 14, Browns 10 At Houston, Rob Carpenter's 1-

Perpetual Motion in 2 Sports

By Paul Attner

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6 (WP)—John Lucas was holding an impromptu basketball clinic outside one of San Francisco's finest waterfront restaurants. His voice rose, attracting the interest of a group of tourists. It was no accident; he always performs at his best in front of a

"They say, 'Luke, how do you make that one-motion, off-thedribble, underhand pass?" he said, flinging his arm like a soft-ball pitcher. "I tell them it's easy. Tennis. That's the answer. Just like a forehand."

He nodded, satisfied with the explanation. Only one thing bothered him: he knew that his audience probably did not rec-ognize him or realize that their minute of enlightment had come from the star goard of the Golden State Warriors of the National Baskeball Association.

"Haven't been around here long enough for people to recognize my face," he explained earlier. "Got to give me time." The Unique Performer

There may be an athlete who is more aware than Lucas of where he has been and where he hopes to go, but Lucas hasn't found him. At age 25, he has parlayed athletic skill, a dynamic personality and a lot of moxie parallel in this era of the specialized athlete.

He is considered a good enough basketball player to have been taken by Golden State as compensation for one State as compensation for one of the game's reigning super-stars, Rick Barry. He also is the only black playing World Team Tennis, where he and Renee Richards formed the league's best mixed-doubles team.

"They call us the odd couple," Lucas said, not trying to hide a widening grin. "They are right. But maybe they should say we are the smart couple, too. We showed we can play the game and not just be sideshow attractions. Hey, people finally were talling about ple finally were talking about our ability not just who we are."

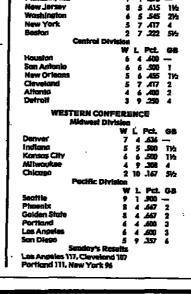

He is playing one of the two sports 50 weeks a year, and teaches at a basketball camp one of the two other weeks. He is perpetual motion at work, with enough time to slow down for a pretty woman.

Wears His Advertising

He drives around town in a $15,000 car, has a closet full of leather and fur coats and wears a chain around his neck carry-ing the words "Cool Hand Luke" surrounded by a cluster of diamonds.

He has invested the $1 million-plus he signed for three years ago after leaving the Uni-versity of Maryland. Through the guidance of his agent-adviser, Donald Dell, he could be financially independent for life within two years.

NBA Standings EASTERN CONFERENCE Attentic Division W L Pct. GB iphia 7 1 875 —

John Lucas

"Then I can do whatever I want with my future," he said. "If I want to quit basketball, I can. If I want to play tennis full time, I can. It's been tough sometimes; they put me on an allowance and a couple of credit cards and I can't go crazy spending, but this is where I want to be with my life."

He won't retire. Lucas gets his energy from the spotlight; his glow is fueled by applause and compliments.

From the moment he stepped onto the basketball court at Maryland as a freshman and made his first eight shots. Lucas has been something special.

He was mature beyond his years, an athlete who could dazzle reporters with a mixture of corn, doubletalk and delightful conversation and who could calm his volatile coach with a grandfatherly pat on the shoul-der.

Freshmen don't start in the Atlantic Coast Conference, Lu-cas did. College players can't be big scorers without a jump shot: Lucas, who relies on a one-hand push scored big. Guards aren't chosen first in an NBA draft; Lucas was, by Houston.

Assists Come First

Players also aren't supposed to make big money in pro basketball by letting others score most of the points. But don't tell that to John Lucas. He purposely will pass up a shot in order to pick up an assist. And he expects to be rewarded handsomely for his benevolence.

As always, Lucas, who can milk cheers for a well-thrown pass better than anyone in the league; has a well-thought-out reason for his assists. "If someone else can score better than you, then he should get the ball and I should do the passing," he

"But if I get you the ball you better score. That's what you are getting paid for and that's the only way the team is going Lucas views basketball as a great ego sport. He has tailored "complement what the others on the team do. It takes court savvy to do what I do, and I get that from tennis.

More Time Needed

"I don't have the ability of others in tennis; I'd have to play fulltime to really develop. But I raised my own eyebrows last year in Team Tennis the way I played. I have to outthink the other guy. If I know my fore-hand is my best shot, I have to maneuver so I can make sure I hit more forehands. "I'm certainly not in it [tennis] for the money. But this is the perfect life for me. Once I get bored with basketball, I start playing tennis. Then when tennis is getting old, it's time for basketball." Lucas, who is leading Golden State in every category except rebounds, survives on both the tennis and baskethail courts with his eye-catching quickness. Off the court, a quick mind that can grasp the uniqueness of every opportunity is his strength. Take, for example, his pairing with Richards, the controversial transsexual. Her doubles part-ner logically should fear being constantly overshadowed by the publicity and attention Richards attracts wherever she plays. Lucas, however, approached their partnership with the idea that he would benefit just as much from their performances.

He was correct. Fans came out to see them play doubles and, in the process, found both could survive as genuine ath-letes as well as celebrities. They won three times as many matches as they lost during the Team Tennis circuit, and made it to the quarterfinals at the U.S. Open despite Richards' ailing Achilles tendon, which had to be repaired with surgery.

Urge to Win

"I think Team Tennis did wonders for her. She finally gained recognition as a player and not a sideshow. We both did. I wasn't in the game strictly for publicity. I want to win in whatever game I play.

"We got along great. And she is something. I was going into a redneck bar in Lakeland, Fla., for a beer and she told me that she better go in there with me.

"Somebody in the bar said, 'Look at the nigger.' She just stopped and yelled out, 'The next one who says something. said a word. Hey, it's a true sto-

Lucas claims his nonstop life can be lonely, although he doesn't give himself a chance to contemplate boredom very long. He visited 92 cities last year. gave out hundreds of interviews and autographs and broke a few hearts along the way. He's sure of one thing: "I haven't got time to get married, not yet, but they keep on trying to tie me down."

A Serious Side

Behind the glibness and the ego and the catchy phrases, however, is concern. Lucas frets that his life is so free from worry — his bills and his money are handled by Dell and his associates - that he won't be prepared properly to cut the umbilical cord from pro sports.

"I want basketball to use me," he said, "but I want to be able to say that I've used bas-ketball, too. I'm not trying to be rich, but I want to use basketball as a stepping stone to a higher life.
I look at some of the players who have gotten out and how they are struggling. I mean, everything is done for you. Ex-athletes think they are still important, but they aren't. I get leery about others paying my bills. I don't have time to do it now, so it's fine, but I know I can do it if I had to.

if I can't pay my own bills, you better put me in a baby carriage and feed me."

has been sentenced to a year in jail for a Belmont Park horserace ring-er scandal that netted him $78,000 in winning bets. He also was fined $1,000.

The 44-year-old veterinarian

In one of the biggest scandals in the history of thoroughbred racing in New York, a Urugnayan stakes-winning horse, Cinzano, was substituted for a plater named Lebon in a race last year. Gerard heavily backed the winner, which went off at 57-1. Gerard, who had treated such

By Lynn Darling Talking With Koko WASHINGTON (WP) What can you say about a

seven-year-old gorilla who lies? That she likes rhyming and the the country. In the afternoons, while Miss Patterson leaves to color red? That she laughs to do other research or to write, herself and talks to her dolls? Koko has Michael to play with, talk to, berate, or, so far without Koko, who lives at Stanford success, to seduce, University in Palo Alto, Calif., Koko, a vegetarian for the and uses sign language to make herself understood, does all of most part, although a little hamburger is included in her diet, these things, and while there is dines at 5 and is in bed by 7:30, something distressing about disleaving Miss Patterson free for covering that the denizens of the the evening but on standby should anything go wrong. Life in the mobile home is graanimal kingdom might not be quite the paragons of virtue that one had been led to believe, cious, if increasingly crowded, but Koko's life and times have not always been so tranquil. Miss Patterson began working with Koko in 1972, when Koko was a year old and an inmate of the San Francisco Zoo, where she was recovering from maintitrition.

Until last year, Koko remained the property of the zoo which, Miss Patterson says, did not always turn a sympathetic ear to the priorities of scientific research and instead wanted Koko back for breeding purposes (gorillas being rather rare and expensive zoological items). So last year Miss Patterson set up the Gorilla Foundation, which bought Koko from the 200 for $12,000.

Sometimes, when Koko is bored with answering questions such as, "What kind of an animal does not live in water" which tests her grammar - or with identifying the same picture in a picture book (which tries her patience), she answers her questioner in rhymes.

"Squash," says the teacher, "Wash," says Koko, which is doubly difficult for her, Miss Patterson explains, because she is translating into a different language — hearing the rhymes in spoken English and articulating them in American sign language, the method of communication used by about 200,000 deaf people in this country. In the manner of most teenagers, the gorilla does not speak only when spoken to, behavior that, because she is a gorilla and not a Sean Cassidy fan, is encouraged. Koko has been observed talking to her dolls, tell-ing them which one has been good that day and which has been bad.

This rather Calvinist preoccupation with guilt and innocence is continued as well in her solitary pursuits. "Bad," she will tell herself angrily, while nevertheless sitting in a corner ripping to shreds some material she was not supposed to have; "Koko

Generation Gap

And while there is something of a generation gap developing between teacher and pupil — "She's at that stage," says Miss Patterson, "where she thinks she doesn't need anyone to tell her what to do" - at least there's no current identity crisis.
One day, Miss Patterson recalls, she was sitting with a colleague who referred to Koko as an adolescent while Miss Patterson was calling her a juvenile. No. Koko informed them, she was, in fact, a gorilla. She is also something of a photographer. The current issue of National Geographic, which supports Miss Patterson's research with about $25,000 a year, has a self-portrait of Koko on the cover, for which she was paid the standard $750 coverpicture fee, according to a Geographic official.

Koko has the vocabulary and learning skills of a child about three or four years younger, and her IQ has been tested at about 85. Unfortunately, she is the victim of something of a cultural bias in such tests. For instance, when she is asked where she would run for shelter, and the choices are a hat, a spoon, a tree and a house, and she picks a tree, she is marked wrong, despite the fact that gorillas feel more secure in trees.

'More Fascinating'

While there are lots of good reasons for and unquestionable benefits in teaching a gorilla to communicate — the clues it gives on the transfer of culture or the evolution of intelligence, for instance, or on techniques used to teach disturbed and retarded children -- there is one even more fundamental reason that Penny Patterson thinks Koko is worth just about every minute of her time.

"Gorillas," she says, "are just whole lot more fascinating than people."

Amin Names New Son After African River

It's not your average kid that gets himself named after a piece of geography, but then your average father usually isn't out conquering the neighbors when his son is born. So far, the Ugandan army of dicta-tor Idi Amin Dada has reportedly gotten as far as the Kagera River in its invasion of Tanzania, so that's the name his senior wife, Medina, has given his new-born baby. Medina and Kagera River are said to be doing fine in a Kampala hospital.

Princess Anne of Britain is in trouble with the Norwegian public because she refused to accept a greeting from a 5-year-old boy at an Oslo hospital. Thanks to television, a national audience watched the princess in a hospital nursery. Oeyvind Stroem, 5, tried to shake hands or get a hug from the princess, but he was spurned. "No Cuddle, not Even a Smile," the Dagbladet newspaper bannered on Page 1. Norwegian newspapers said they received "thousands" of phone calls objecting to the princess' man-ner and saying she should "go home." Princess Anne was in Norway as President of the Save the Children Organization. * * .*
